New Ball Park Exercise Trail Info at Next WCDC Meeting

For those who need a good exercise site right here in Winslow--rather than to have to travel to the Brentwood or West Fork trails--come to the next WCDC meeting and learn the latest on the possible Winslow Trail System.

At the May 12 meeting at the Winslow School (7 pm, Tuesday), there will be important new funding information to discuss about the possible ball field exercise trail system. Mary Anderson attended a recent grants workshop and will present the information to those attending.

Other projects to be discussed include the 5th Annual Winslow Run, as well as the completion of the tree and shrub plantings to prevent erosion along the Peek's Park stream.

If you travel along Highway 71 from Brentwood to Artist Point, there are remnants of many of the roadside Cabin Courts and attractions that laced this highway from the 1930's through the 1950's. Sky-View Lodge remains the oldest cabin court in Arkansas still in operation. The Winslow Museum is now featuring a new exhibit spotlighting these popular little havens of yesteryear. Please take time to come and enjoy the creative work of our volunteers. The museum is always looking for new acquisitions pertaining to Winslow and its surrounding area. We would also love to see photographs and hear stories from days gone by in Winslow. The Winslow Museum is a 501 (c) 3 non-profit organization. We are open from Mon-Fri 9am-3pm and the first Saturday of the month from 9am – 12pm or by appointment. Museum meetings are the last Thursday of every month at 5pm at City Hall. ### Rain Garden

Rain Garden Workshop

Winslow Library

Saturday May 23, 2015

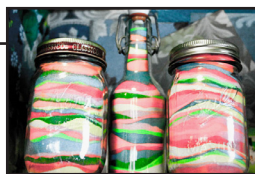

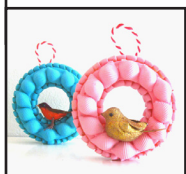

1:00 PM

Have you visited the Rain Garden at the Ball Park at the north end of the cement slab where the tables are located?

The Winslow Library will be presenting a Workshop on how to create your own Rain Garden at home.

A rain garden is a garden which takes advantage of rainfall and stormwater runoff in its design and plant selection. Usually, it is a small garden which is designed to withstand the extremes of moisture and concentrations of nutrients, particularly Nitrogen and Phosphorus, that are found in stormwater runoff. rain gardens are sited ideally close to the source of the runoff and serve to slow the stormwater as it travels downhill, giving the stormwater more time to infiltrate and less opportunity to gain momentum and erosive power.

Correction on April Article "News from Winslow Community Center Association

In the April issue of Within Winslow Part of the following paragraph was deleted from the article "News from Winslow Community Center Association written by Tanya Farris. I apologize for the error.

Money obstacles are going to be one of the biggest hurdles facing the Community Center project. On Day 1 we will need a minimum of $5,000 to cover the costs of closing and legal fees. The WCCA intends on using every tool at our disposal, to raise money and be in position financially to take possession of the property when it becomes available.

To address this, we are now accepting tax-deductible, monetary donations. Checks can be made payable to the WCCA and given to one of the following Board Members: Gary Simpson, Gene Farris, Jerry Bromley, Angela Salrin, or Charles Dwyer.

Additionally, we have created an online-donation site at <http://www.gofundme.com/wccafundraiser> which allows you to gift anonymously using a number of payment options. Note: This online method is considered a "gift" not a tax-deductible donation. It's an excellent way to donate small amounts to the acquisition, restoration and re-purposing of our School.

ROSES & THISTLES

Lots of Roses and Thanks to Ed Herzog for keeping everyone warm and toasty at the Library and City Hall through the winter.

Stan the Man

By Arlen Davidian

To say Stan was a little strange would not be fair.

I grew up as a distant family member who spent many weekends with Stan and his family when I was young. My parents and his had been friends since their days in college and though their paths had gone in different directions they had kept in close touch.

Stan's mother and father were both physicians who practiced in the same office for years. Even so, his mother was a dedicated housewife who always said her job was raising her family. She kidded me often saying that I was her only patient that never got a shot in her office because she and my mom always had to deliver them in the hall.

I was introducing the family to a friend and stammered about, saying this is, uh, er, Doctor and Doctor uh...! She patted me on the arm and said quietly, "You can always introduce us as Doctor and Mrs. Always remember, my husband is the head of this household. I am his dedicated and loving wife who also just happens to be a doctor."

That was the family in which Stan grew up. It was an informal home in which there was never a doubt that he, his siblings and I were always deeply loved.

Stan was not what I would call an avid athlete, but he was willing to compete at anything. When we played checkers, he wouldn't leave the table until I won just as many games as he. Ping Pong was my game. Again, he didn't lay down his paddle until I let him win as many games as I. Well, I said I let him. The truth is, the times I got ahead, I had to work for it.

That was Stan. Kind to a fault and always wanting to be fair.

Over the years I lost track of Stan. I heard from time to time about him or his family, but had not seen them for many years. Then one day I received a post card. It had a photo of a large California Hospital close to where I went to college. On the back was a single note in his horrendous handwriting.

"This is where I work."

That was it.

Several years later, I was in the cafeteria line at his hospital and saw him bring out a huge pan of steaming vegetables. As I got near, he turned away and faced the wall then said quietly, "Hello Arlen."

I greeted him and tried to carry on a conversation. Without turning to face me, he answered a couple of my questions with one or two words then turned and walked away.

I couldn't get Stan out of my mind and began asking about him with some friends.

Stan had married and divorced three times. A short time later, he remarried the same woman he had just divorced.

He had worked at the hospital for almost forty years where he rarely missed a day of work as an orderly carrying food trays to patients and cleaning up their rooms. He rarely spoke to his fellow workers often looking away as he passed them in the hall.

A woman who worked with him said you might say Stan was a little odd. He had no friends with whom he associated. "But," she said, "I must tell you about the real Stan."

He loved Christmas. Every year he spent time making out cards that he took to the Post Office for patients he had cared for during their stay in the hospital. It was not just a box. It was several large boxes of cards and letters. A few days before Christmas, a mail truck would arrive at his home and the driver would tap on the door. Stan would go out to retrieve his mail. It didn't come wrapped with a rubber band. It came in four or five huge mail bags with thousands of letters and cards. My friend said Stan spent the holidays reading every one.

When Stan passed away several years ago, the mail trucks began to arrive and bags were unloaded by two men whose eyes filled with tears when they lined them up along the wall of his tiny home. The table was heaped with casseroles and salads and desserts were piled up on the counter tops. At the cemetery several police officers were on duty to direct traffic that lined the roads that wound among the lawns and trees.

Yes, Stan was a strange man that many thought had no friends. But when the end came, in the archives of this earth a niche was reserved where his simple life merged perfectly.

Stan was a man whose life we should emulate so each of our lives can be defined as "strange" as was his.

Winslow Community Center Association Update

By Tanya Farris

Progress is slow as the WCCA threads through the bureaucracy involved in obtaining the school property and converting it into a community center. Meetings continue to be held on a weekly basis with either legal counsel, Greenland School Board or government officials as we make our case. However, the hurdles haven't slowed our commitment and continued push for this dream to become a reality.

To that end the WCCA held a very successful fundraiser at the First Baptist Church in Winslow featuring some amazing gospel music on April 10th. Our gratitude to the church for hosting the event. And a very special thank you to the Gospel Sonlighters, Glen Faulkner Group, and Larry Garrison for their hearts, talents and time. The fundraiser successfully raised $1,000.00 for our effort.

Our next FUNdraising event is a rock-n-roll/blues concert at the Winslow ballpark on May 16th from 1pm to 5pm. Appearances by Sonic Katz & Mandy Lee, Slowtowne Serenaders and Left of Center. Food and refreshments will be offered. No entry fee- Donations gratefully accepted! Additionally, we are looking for former students, teachers and parents to give brief testimonies about their attachment to the school property and what it will mean for the community to have the property back in our possession. Let's set a huge goal to break our previous fundraising record while having an awesome time with family, friends and neighbors.

We're happy to share the official logo of the Winslow Community Center Association approved by the board at the April 20th meeting.

Stay tuned!

“The Cavern”

David Gesn © 2014

Many land grants were issued by a colonial secretary in London. Warrants were not worth the paper written upon, but politicians of the era were not willing to voice opinions concerning them. The American Indian lost out throughout the land, pushing for any justice on their behalf. If the Indians did not cede any land that someone wanted or claimed the party in question began skirmishes to provoke the tribe or tribes into war.

The Proclamation of 1763 only stated that common individual citizens could not legally buy land from the Indian tribes. All land agreements had to be settled but the King's Parliament, or Continental Congress. This is how it pretty much began and ended for the American Indian. As it went along, the Indian knew down the line he would have to grant land transactions, but thought the white man would honor his own words of intent. Of course we all know how that went as history marched forward.

The location of the cavern was not impeccable. It was off the beaten paths of any one concern, but after all it was a secret.

There were certain flaws concerning it. It was not where anyone could see it, even at a close distance. Many people could walk and hunt nearby and it would remain a secret.

Some parts of the cavern had to be removed and sculpted to house certain commodities and arrangements,

The Cherokee and Osage were not the first people to discover the cavern. Yet the Indians kept it preserved and intact. Maybe it was just possible that Indians were not as stupid as so many folks thought during the 1700's and 1800's.

Sure there was a treaty set forth in 1783 that supposedly the lands in question were owned by citizens of the United States, west, east, north, and south, but was any of it morally correct? Where the cavern remains other than the Federal Government, who, morally and legally, really own it (other than God)? Right at this interval I would have to say a handful of people own it – the people that know where it is. We have a “claim” to it, but in a court of law it doesn't mean squat! Reverse psychology and political philosophy go hand in hand when the Federal Government is involved. Being in a National Forest, the government of the land has internal jurisdiction over any and all matters concerning the “area – of – concern”. A case filed in San Francisco doesn't give any individual the rights to any land owned by the Federal Government. Kinda' reminds you of what happened in the past with the Indians – Ain't it so??

Now you may realize why we are revealing this wonder of amazement. Also, you can realize why it would possibly be futile to pursue any effort in removing certain arrangements.

There are no bats in and around it, but the law states no entry into caves. Also it is extremely hazardous to do it.

It's not for everyone to attempt. There was a time when I was extremely adventurous. I would try just about anything – dangerous or not! Slipping down into that cavern not knowing the end result at the time did not bother at all. It's not because I was tough, it was “the thing” to do, or so I thought at the time. Since I was nine years old I have experienced situations that that most folks just would not even think of doing! I'm getting older and much wiser now. Plus my health is not what it was once upon a time. I do not find that it takes a lot of excitement to thrill me anymore – at least not like the younger years. My colleagues pretty much feel the same way. Time has a way of doing that to folks.

Although it's still not the right time to reveal its exact location, we all hope that whoever does find it (the cavern) will feel the same way we have – if they should find it on their own. Spending a lifetime on a Hawaiian vacation would not even come close to the peace of mind that exists in that hole in the hills!

Velda's Words

By Velda Brotherton

Happy Spring

Readers in Colorado are wondering if spring is coming, but this snow gives all the skiers one last go at their favorite pastime While the rest of us enjoy the sweet, warm air. Here in Arkansas the dogwood and redbud trees have splashed the Ozarks with brilliant colors.

I'm celebrating by offering two of my books from Wild Rose Press at a special price. For .99 cents my readers can catch up on reading anything you might have missed.

Once There Were Sad Songs follows a Vietnam vet in the 1980s fleeing his demons and a woman in search of her true destiny. What happens when they clash? If you haven't read this book, here's your chance. You can't beat the price.

As if that weren't enough of a bargain, let's go back into the 1870s and see what it was like for veterans in those days. Rowena's Helion is the second in The Victorian series. They came to Kansas from England to buy land and start new lives. Lord Blair Prescott, veteran of the siege of Paris by Napoleon III, is looking for peace but when Rowena offers it, he fears what he might do to her. Again, a 99 cent bargain. Both books will be offered from April 17 through May 1. You can find them on Amazon and at [Wild Rose Press].

Exciting things are happening here in Northwest Arkansas with the establishment of Oghma Creative Media. Originally I signed with them to publish Beyond the Moon, a book of my heart. This is the story of a Vietnam Vet broken by 9 years held prisoner and the woman who is determined to heal him. This mainstream novel has come out in hardback, paperback and Ebook. It was submitted for a Pulitzer Prize.

My second book with them is the second in A Twist of Poe Series, The Tell-Tale Stone, a mystery featuring Cherokee Crime Scene Investigator with dark powers and Jessica West, an investigative reporter with a real nose for the news. If you've read The Purloined Skull, then you'll want to pick up a copy of this one, coming out May 5.

This series comes out of my nine years spent working for a small rural newspaper.

Here's a peek at my fantastic cover designed by Casey Cowan. In October check out my first horror novel, A Savage Grace, which I'm editing now. The cover is superb and I'm giving you a sneak-peek at it.

Lenore is an ordinary woman until a demon in search of a new body pursues her. She must learn how to exorcise him from his previous body before he leaves it for hers.

Last of all, those of you who did not get a copy of my Ozarks cookbook, it will be reissued in time for Christmas, 2015. Or if you did get one, then maybe you know someone who might enjoy reading and creating those special recipes from my mother's collection of almost 80 years.

Today finds me working on the third in the Victorian Series, Tyra's

Gambler, and thinking about and making notes for a sequel to Beyond the Moon, for Katy and Glen's story is not finished by a long shot.

Writers always appreciate readers taking the time to leave a review after they read and enjoy our books.

Have a great spring, and get a lot of reading done.

“Comedy Corner”

By David Gesn © 2015

It is true that I am an expert at some arrangements, but by no means do I know everything. Someone once remarked that I would have to be 150 years old to have done everything I said I have done and or seen in my lifetime. For that person I feel truly sorry for, for undoubtedly they do not get out much.

For but a short time of existence, I was but a puppet doing one specific action that I was taught to do; the money was great! The work was rewarding, but tiring. There was little time for anything else, and I enjoyed adventure and learning as much as I could. Hallelujah!

As a child, I was hyper and could never sit still. Adventure became a norm and nothing seemed too dangerous. It followed me throughout much of my lifetime as it remains today. Even today, I am constantly learning and studying for the world forever changes. I have slowed way down, for age and health has caught up with me.

Through music and art, I have learned how to help others. Though no expert thru psychology and philosophy I have learned how to recreate the world in my own terms and to change myself (though at times it is a struggle)...By changing myself, can I help others. The internet can explain how to do most anything. If a person doesn't get out and do the things they have learned, at least some of those things what good is the knowledge they keep inside locked-up?

Through my music and art, for a short span of a day, I can teach both children and adults alike how to actually relax and think of something other than the negativity of the world within their reach. I've never been "filthy rich", but I have been wealthy. I've learned business arrangements in the past, but money no longer affects me in the same ways of the past. Money has a way of over empowering you thoughts and changing a person for the worst.

It's true, I've done and seen a lot of things, but I'm not 150 years old, With my experiences I no pass my knowledge onto the youngsters of the world. Most of what I've seen and done was, of course, without the Internet, but what a life I have had! Through the negative have I experienced the positive. My door is open, come and listen to my experiences and walk away feeling good about life. You might even learn something new. Hallelujah!

The only thing more difficult than performing every act with impeccability is living with the consequences of doing it any other way.

Hello Everyone

I am so impressed with the upcoming community art collaboration, "Out of the Woods" and I want to make sure it is on your calendar to attend the reception.

Please make it a point to be here this Friday evening and support this brain child of John Ford and Erin Chapman and also to encourage everyone who has had a hand in creating this ever evolving art installation at Ozark Folkways.

You will see an amazing display of art, enjoy the company of many of your friends and local artists and as always, enjoy wonderful food and drink.

Contact me if you have any questions and I hope to see each of you soon!

"The Dream Lives On!"

Venture with us as we explore a large scale installation and community art event involving many local and not so local artists whose mostly three dimensional art pieces are inspired by the Ozark forests.

Pieces relating to woodland myths, the animals of the woods or sometimes their remains, a whimsical homestead that has succumbed to the encroaching forest, this art will be exciting!

$5.00 individual/$10.00 family donation requested, refreshments included.

A highlight of the evening will be a short performance by the Fayetteville Frame Drummers. They will lead the procession to the show at 6:00.

YOU THINK ABOUT THAT ## IS GOD TOLERANT?

Psalm 9:17, The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God.

I hear so much about "Tolerance" these days. Of course, anyone with an ounce of intelligence, logic, and common sense know those who are screaming "Intolerance" are the most "Intolerant" of all. My question, Is God Intolerant? No, God will not send anyone to hell but he will allow you to go there because of your free choice to live and die in your sins. God has made the rules. God has lay down the Law. God doesn't like sin and will not allow it or anyone who lives and dies in sin into Heaven. So, is God Intolerant? How about the Judge that sentenced one to death because of their crime. Is that Judge intolerant? We live in a society with Rules of Law and Nature. For any society to survive there must be intolerance to the unnatural behaviors and disregard of man made and natural Rules of Law. Same sex marriage is unnatural and perverted. Perversion is never satisfied. When left "Unchecked" or accepted as "Natural" will inherently spawn, foster and promote more adverse and undesirable perversion. I have no problem with two men or two women getting together in the privacy of their own place. I believe it is sin and they can deal with their maker after death. Screaming intolerance for the sole purpose of promoting an agenda and intimidating the majority of this society that doesn't won't to accept this "unnatural" as "natural" is no different than a child throwing a tantrum because the intolerant parents won't let the child have what he wants. I'm Wesley Wood, YOU THINK ABOUT THAT!

Subject: Sorcerer. Rev 9:21.

Got to checking out Biblical meanings on Marijuana and LSD and sent this to a young person asking when I thought MJ would be legalized. Alcohol is also legal and overuse or driving under the influence of it is not. One uses these drugs for recreational use or as the sorceress did and will do in the later times.

Therefore these drugs will be legalized and used for demonic practices. Does this mean we can use them? Not if you want to follow the Lord.

My experience a few years back was when I got rear ended by a fellow who was "stoned". He said he thought I was moving when I was at a stop light, it can cause you to misjudge speed and distance.

(Mind altering drugs) used to produce stuper and evoke religious spirits. Rev 22:15. Pharmacy. Pharmacopoeia Drugs that are used in the latter days. Do you adhere to an item that is killing your family and taking you and them to hell? I care about what God says and not some dippy hippy. Break the cycle."

By the way, I really appreciate seeing prayers of thanksgiving in cafes. It is good seeing a family holding hands, bowing and praying. That didn't happen a few years back.

I also noticed that some preachers prayed so long that the taters got cold and one even thought The Lord was deft. He prayed so loud that you couldn't hear the dishwasher drop plates. Bless his heart he covered up my belch!

I always stop dining when a table near is offering thanks for their meal.... or am I just being nosy?
